Examiner's Reasons for Allowance

As previously noted, prior art of record does not disclose nor reasonably suggest, inter alia, providing an account history display including information corresponding to money transfers between a first party and a plurality of second parties, the account history display comprising, for each money transfer transaction, one or more of the following information items: a name, a reference number associated with the payment enabler system, an email address, an amount, a date, a transaction description, and the additional information.

Discussion of Closest Prior Art

The closest non-patent literature is Gardyne, Allan, Introducing PayPal, 9 December 1999, downloaded from the Internet <http://www.associateprograms.com/articles/385/1/Introducing-PayPal> on 29 October 2006. However, the reference does not specifically disclose the use of an address book database and does not provide details as to what information is displayed. As applicant notes, the reference does not provide the missing teachings of address book, and relationship of address book entry to registered users database.

The closest US prior art of record is Gillin, et al., US 7010512. Gillin discloses informing a second party of an account by sending the second party an email. The email contains a greeting and directs the second party to perform a specified action in order to cause an activation of the account. . However, the reference does not specifically disclose the use of an address book database and does not provide details as to what information is displayed.

The closest non-US prior art of record is JP411025171A, published 29 January 1999, filed on 1 July 1997 by Takao Sasaki. Sasaki discloses attaching a bank card to an e-mail order and sending it to a second party. However, Sasaki fails to disclose use of an address book, and creating an entry where none exists.
